
Lord Kindo Target of Free Races Plot

Lord Kindo, an active and vocal supporter of the ongoing reforms in Relis Mar, has been targeted by a complex plot to attack his credibility - believed to be the work of the Free Races. A massive campaign of misinformation is underway after Lord Kindo's surprise public rally earlier today. Wild and completely unfounded rumours about what was said at the rally have been circulating, and we would like to take this chance to assure our readers that anything they have heard that might seem out of character with Lord Kindo's unwavering support of continued and increased presence of the King's forces in Relis Mar are not true. In fact, anyone spreading these rumours is likely an agent of the Free Races and should be reported to the proper authorities immediately. As Lord Kindo's health continues to be fragile and the Free Races will stop at nothing to undermine his advocacy of the King's cause, further public appearances have been cancelled.

Undead Activity in Western Wastes

The Western Wastes saw more than its fair share of undead activity these past few weeks, with several powerful undead discovered (and quickly dispatched) by the citizens of West Haven. Under the ever-present banner of the King's Hand, the valiant Merrick, Kali, and Vanna, along with newcomers Arthur, Simon, Virgil, and Desmond were able to defeat a centuries-old undead guardian. We would like to take the opportunity to clarify the common misconception that such beings are more common in the Western Wastes because of some "ancient society" that was once here and defeated by the undead army before it attacked Var'en'tor. This laughable fairy tale should be transparent to every one. There is but one Kingdom and but one King. Not just now, but always.

Festival Continues!

The festivities continue in Torval! I would encourage anyone interested to re-read the article from last edition where we talked about this wonderful event in more detail.

Declaration of Martial Law "Greatly Exaggerated"

Today the King declared an elevated state of emergency in the troubled city of Relis Mar in order to ensure public safety and protect the peace. This statement of Martial Law has been exaggerated by some and in no way revokes any of the rights granted to the citizens in the Great Paper. The declaration is limited to granting members of the Royal Army the ability to arrest citizens they believe are working against the Kingdom. There will be no change in the way these citizens are tried and convicted of crimes; this will still be handed by the legal system currently in place. When asked about the declaration, a representative of the King said this: "It is unfortunate that there is so much misunderstanding about this minor and necessary step by the King. I would hate to see a negative reaction to this move lead to an all out declaration of Martial Law, including the right for the army to try prisoners without the law's involvement."

I think we can all agree we should keep a level head and prevent that from happening!

Fears of Plague in Orus

Kingdom authorities are raising warning flags over a disease that has begun spreading among the citizens of Orus. Although too early to tell for certain, it appears contagious and potentially very serious. As a precautionary measure, the army has set up a quarantine zone around the city. All citizens are warned to avoid contact with any travelers coming from Orus, and report their presence to the nearest King's Hand or military representative. Sadly, there will always be a few misguided individuals who endanger the lives of others by trying to sneak out of the quarantine before the crisis is over
